Subversion is a common strategy, perfected by the Chinese Communist Party, to discreetly seize control of a nation.

The ultimate goal is complete takeover, both economically and militarily, until permanent capitulation is achieved.

The concept works on the three stages of "demoralize," "destabilize," and "open conflict." This can then be used for additional subversive operations.

The battle for technological supremacy is to ensure that other nations cannot generate superior capacity in science and defense.

The use of a pre-emptive pulse generated by nuclear weapons in order to destroy strategic targets.

The ultimate goal is to identify an issue, "contaminate" it by feeding misinformation, and then "defuse" the issue by pitting people in two extremes. After the enemy is divided, the two sides can be driven into conflict, which allows the perpetrator to step in and stabilize "normalcy" the situation.

The creation and smuggling of groups or movements that appear to support an adversary's interests, such as terrorism, to create conflict.

The use of economic aid to create dependency and corruption in order to assist a target nation's adversaries.

Unrestricted warfare is a strategy of using every facet of a country to achieve a military objective.

The control of a society is achieved gradually, to seize control of a society.

China's Secret War Against America

Methods of subversion and unrestricted war used to undermine the United States